Demeanor definitely showed something tragic had happened during the day morning was to gather and by several hundred people. The event continued through 2010, highlighted the amazing energy, at the outing, Mix said. "It really means a lot (keeping Joey's legacy alive). That probably (was) the sixth guitar that he's had a guardian angel watching over his classmates that he had a passion for learning over the next day before. It was even more obvious as a parish that we needed to respond to our parishioners who needed a comforting moment of solace. Our young adults put together a candlelight vigil prayer service the evening, which was attended by several hundred people. "Many, many churches in Las Vegas had similar services all over the city. For its reputation in Sin City, Las Vegas has a very religious, compassionate and helpful city. If events come from all over the world, we feel tremendous camaraderie among the people who were very close to it. We are a city that cares, as evidenced by the thousands of people who lined up to give blood and the almost $3 million already raised by a local charity to assist the families who were affected. Our parish and many others are collecting items to be donated to the local hospitals to give to the family members who have flown into the city from all over the world to be with their wounded family members. Simple things such as restaurant gift cards, wrapped snacks, and other small things that make sitting in a hospital waiting room a bit more bearable. "Through it all, we are praying. We are praying for a world where light will overcome darkness. That is what we are for and what we can do to prevent the evil that brings us here and wherever it occurs."

Larry Mix played a round of golf the day before the 17th Angels in the Fairway charity golf outing was held late summer to honor his late son, Joey, and raise funds to help the programs of the Leukemia Research Foundation. Mix never plays in the actual fundraiser, which was held this year at the Grand Geneva Resort in Lake Geneva, Wis., as he too busy, or playing 18 holes in his free time tradition. "This day popped out of front me on the 13th hole," recalled a tearful Mix, a Buffalo Grove, Ill., resident. "I held the other guy's hand and out it with that that was Joey coming out to say, "Hi.'"

"That was my memory," from the 2017 event. Well, that was one of those emotion-filled joy moments Mix recalled. Yes, the day of the tournament, the weather started beautiful — sunny blue skies. But then all of a sudden it looked like the skies were going to open up. Mix and many others were rain-watching and it looked terrible. In fact, officials at the golf courses said Mix that they might have to quickly evacuate the course. Ultimately, their weather was_went for naught. The rain never came. "I thought that was a joy taking care of me," Mix added. Joey was 3 1/2 years old when he passed away in August, 1996, from leukemia, so parrots Patti and Larry immediately banded with the Northfield-based Leukemia Research Foundation (LRF), which is dedicated to conquering all blood cancers by funding research into their causes and cures, and improving the quality of life of those touched by these diseases.

RAISING AWARENESS AND MONEY FOR LEUKEMIA RESEARCH

The first Angels in the Fairway was held in 1997, netting about $80,000. The event continued through 2010 by highlighting the 2004 event, when more than $12,000 was raised. In 2011, they teamed with Bob Chinn's Crab House in Wheeling. Joey's Angels was the beneficiary of their golf tournament, and that continued through 2015. Last summer the Angels in the Fairway was held at two locations, raising about $100,000. The summer, about $125,000 was raised to bring the total to $3.7 million in net revenue by Joey's Angels in support of the Leukemia Research Foundation. "I thought this year's event went great," Mix said. We're hoping, in our lifetime, we'll see a cure."}
